

Native Shrubs for the Palouse - and for the Birds

Nancy Miller, Idaho Native Plant Society

Nancy and Reid Miller built their home in 1992 on the north side of Moscow Mountain. They were fairly knowledgeable about the large conifers on their new property but only had a casual knowledge of the Palouse and woodland shrubs from hiking and field trips. Fortunately for them the shrubs were already present in the various habitats on the property. Over the years they have enjoyed watching the resident and migrating birds, butterflies, mammals and insects which use the shrubs for eating, gleaning, preening, resting, nesting, getting protection, and so on. Of the shrubs Nancy will discuss, most are present on their property or in the nearby area. She will discuss their needs and how best to use them whether on a large property or in an urban garden.
